

Learning Communities for READING 90

Spring 2010 Opportunities

A learning community means all the same students are in both courses, and the instructors coordinate what you're learning based on a theme.

How do I register for a learning community?

1. Select a learning community that fits your assessment scores.
2. Find the LCOM subject area on the registration webpage.
3. Find the learning community section that fits your schedule.
4. Add it to your Cart, and register for it. It's simple!

Advantages of learning communities:

- Higher GPA and completion rates
- Close network with other students
- Specially designed courses and events
- More positive college experience

"It's a good experience to be a part of. It really gives you a chance to get to know people and learn a lot in the process. Small class size, friendly teachers, and a great learning experience." – Tony Taylor

“Being a part of the learning community has been extremely beneficial to me as a first year student. It has really helped me ease into college life, as well as becoming familiar with the college and what resources I have available to me as a student. I feel the learning community has in some ways helped me become a successful student.” – Amanda Steimer
